

M'GLORY IS DEFIANT.

Again a Prisoner To-Day at Yorkville Court.

His Irving Place House Raided a Third Time in Four Days.

Determined Efforts by the Police to Suppress the Dive-Keeper.

Billy McGlory was arraigned in Yorkville Court this morning, before Justice McMahen, for the second time within four days, on the charge of maintaining a disorderly house at 1 Irving place. Already there are two charges of a similar character hanging over his head. It is said by his accusers that there is no bolder, more defiant violator of the law than clerical-looking, square Billy McGlory, who has figured more prominently and universally before the public than any dive-keeper since the days of Harry Hill. But, like Harry Hill, McGlory is "on the list" to go eventually.

BILLY M'GLORY.
The police have made him a marked man, and the law-abiding citizens of New York will be pleased when they hear that Billy McGlory has been returned to the quarters he occupied years ago on Blackwell's Island for running precisely the same kind of a place in Irving place and Fourteenth street.

McGlory's personality is unique. He is, according to his own statement, forty-six years old. A rapid and voracious life has thinned his hair and mustache with the frost of premature age.

He reluctantly tries to smother those outward marks of advancing years by imparting an artificial hirsute.

McGlory permits his hair to grow quite bushy at the back of his head, thus lending him a theological aspect. To heighten the ministerial air, McGlory habitually wears a black, single-breasted frock coat, buttoned tightly to the collar.

Then he dons an iridescent silk hat and this completes the tout ensemble of the celebrated dive-keeper and law-breaker.

A little after midnight this morning a squad of Capt. Clinchy's bluescots tramped through the doors of the Irving Hotel and took possession of the place.

"Guard the doors and don't let a soul get away," thundered the captain, as he marched up to the ever-smiling dive-keeper and said: "You'll come with me again, McGlory."

"Certainly, captain. You came, you saw, and you collared," quoted classical Billy, changing the phrase to suit the exigencies of the occasion.

With a little party of six men and three women in a further corner of the ground floor parlor the case was very different. Two of the men were terrified. The third was James Connolly, known as "One-Eyed Connolly, the prize-fighter" from Boston.

Connolly was escorting a party of swell "spents" around town last night. They were doing "darkest New York" under his guidance, and he had steered his party into McGlory's. They were treating the women to drinks when Capt. Clinchy's set entrapped them.

Their "respectability" was so quickly established at the station-house, however, that they were immediately released. It's said they came from Rhode Island.

The three women were May Smith, Mabel Hudson and Anna Wagner, and they were detained. Clinchy's men knew them as "old timers."

Although the swell Rhode Islanders were released by Capt. Clinchy, he detained Salvator Giovanni, of 213 East Thirteenth street; Antonio Berlotti, 97 Fourth avenue; Daniel Davis, 332 East Eighty-third street, and Michael O'Neill, of 243 East Eighteenth street, and these men, with the trio of women and McGlory himself, anxiously awaited the calling of the cases against them.

O'Neill is said to be a brother of McGlory. He was taken from a bed in one of the upper rooms of the Irving House. They all had a long wait before the cases were reached, and it was 12 o'clock when McGlory was called to the bar.

Henry Hart, of 115 East Fourteenth street, immediately adjoining the Irving place house swore to a complaint charging McGlory with conducting a disorderly house. Hart said he had heard boisterous profane and obscene language in the Irving House last night and further that he knew the place to be a resort for disreputable women.

"I would like to have the case continued until Tuesday afternoon next, when the other cases are coming up," said the representative of counsel. "It's the prisoner's right."

Justice McMahen continued the case and ordered the defendant to furnish new bonds in $1,000 to appear on that date.

McGlory spoke up vehemently: "Your Honor, can I make a charge against this man for keeping a disorderly house?" pointing to Hart.

"Certainly, if you have any evidence," Justice McMahen replied.

"I've occupied a room in his house a dozen times for improper purposes," angrily claimed McGlory.

"Bring your evidence here Tuesday, and we'll see about taking a complaint," said Justice McMahen.

The three women, Smith, Wagner and Hudson, were next heard on charges of being disorderly persons. Hartson is a handsome girl who said she is employed in a Grand street crockery store, and lives at 222 South Fifth street, Brooklyn.

She admitted having visited McGlory's place several times. Wagner said she was a dressmaker at 217 East Twenty-fourth street, and had been in McGlory's but two or three times. Smith said she was a milliner at 401 De Kalb avenue, Brooklyn, and that last night was the first time she had been in the place.

Policeman Dooley, of Capt. Clinchy's force, testified that he had seen the two first named in McGlory's place frequently. He never saw the other woman before. That saved the alleged milliner and she was discharged. The others were each fined $10, which was paid by one of McGlory's beneficent, and the three women joined each other on the sidewalk, exchanging gleeful congratulations.

Of the men, Giovanni, Davis and Berlotti

ÆSOP ON CURRENT EVENTS. CXXIII.

A Wolf, whose lair was near a sheep pasture, nightly destroyed the young lambs. At first he concealed himself when the shepherds came to hunt him, but finally becoming emboldened he refused to retreat before them, and was caught and put to death.

WILL DIE FROM HIS BLOWS.

John Thenell Chokes and Fatally Beats His Wife.

were discharged, but "One-eyed Connolly" and Michael O'Neill alias McGlory were fined $10 a piece.

"I hardly know what to say about this fellow," said McGlory to an Evening World reporter. "I begin to think that I shall be arrested simply because my name is Billy McGlory. I give you my word there was nothing wrong going on last night. These people were in there, quietly talking and drinking soft stuff."

"Can't a man run a place and sell soft stuff? I've got to make a living. This man Hauff wants to run me out of my place and get it himself. I know several men who are trying to capture the place. If you don't call this persecution I'd like to know what it is."

And McGlory looked really pained and acted as if he was an ill-used man.

McGlory sent messengers after bondsman,

BULLS ONE DAY, BEARS NEXT.

Manipulations to Regain Stocks Depresses the Market.

WALL STREET, Dec. 11.—The market had a tried look this morning. The bulls had rallied yesterday and were depressing prices to-day in order to get their stocks back at a lower range.

All the leading stocks yielded to higher.

The woman was beaten by her husband yesterday morning at their home, 10 West One Hundred and Fourth street. She was severely injured in the neck and spine.

Thenell is a prisoner at the One Hundredth street police station.

The woman told the police that her husband is a carpet layer. He is a Protestant and she a Catholic. They quarreled Monday night over religious differences, and that night she shot on a lounge.

He arose yesterday morning, and they renewed their quarrel when he assaulted her in the manner described and went away, ostensibly to his work.

He was then arrested later in the day, and in Arthur Court to-day was remanded.

Or, E. H. Cox, of 218 West One Hundred and Twelfth street, who is attending Mrs. Thenell, says she cannot remain. The coroner, though sent for at 10 o'clock this morning had not arrived at 4 P.M., when the woman had unconscious.

There was a lively movement in silver certificates which were strong, sales being made from 90c up to 95c.

Sales up to noon reached 10,000 shares.

Lazard Force has notice of another shipment of $25,000 gold to the country to-day, making their total on the way $25,000.

It is announced that the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia road will be opened for redemption, but the date is not yet fixed.

Missouri Pacific was an exception, depicting 12 per cent.

The Industrial and some of the speculators continued strong. Richmond Terminal was a special card, the common rising 12c, and preferred 22c to 31c.

The statement recently issued to the press had to be withdrawn.

There was a lively movement in silver certificates which were strong, sales being made from 90c up to 95c.

Up to noon reached 10,000 shares.

White Plains, N. Y., Dec. 11.—Col. Edward F. Taylor, formerly commander of the Forty-seventh Regiment of Brooklyn, was brought to White Plains last night from Bridgeport on a requisition charging grand larceny of the funds of the Watts estate, of which he is executor. He asked the Deputy Sheriff not to prosecute him, but the court said he must stand trial.

The majority of the Supreme Court Justices did not seem to share the opinion of the attorneys on the subject of uniform.

John Arnold and John Beach expressed themselves strongly in favor of putting the attendants in blue and brass buttons.

Everybody who has any business with the courts knows who the officers are without naming them made prominent by brass buttons.

John Arnold and John Beach, two of the attorneys, declared that the officers had not had fair trials to prosecute uniform.

The majority of the Supreme Court Justices did not seem to share the opinion of the attorneys on the subject of uniform.

John Arnold and John Beach expressed themselves strongly in favor of putting the attendants in blue and brass buttons.

The men, however, put their faith on presenting their defense, which they say, will not allow any such nonsense to his court.

The wire reported that the subject had been revived by the justices. Certainly, we have received no orders to get uniforms, and nothing has been done in that direction.

They are to meet to-morrow for a uniform.

Alfred Lillianthall, who is charged with having false affidavits in regard to inflated Treasury notes forwarded by him to the United States Treasury Department at Washington for redemption, was brought up for examination before the United States Commissioner this morning.

Deputy Marshal John Thomas testified as to the arrest of Lillianthall on orders from Washington, and Alfred Relvay, chief of the Bedlam Department, was then sworn.

He said that the bills forwarded by the deponent were less than one-half of the original sum, and that the letter and affidavit accompanying them stated that the other portions of the bills had been paid by the signature of the attorney who signed the affidavit.

Upon searching the records it was found that one-half of each of these bills had been redeemed for their full face value about three years ago.

Mr. Lillianthall said that when one-half of a bill was presented it was redeemed for its full value, and when one-half less than one-half of the bill was presented it was redeemed for one-half of its face value.

Whether or not Lillianthall forwarded the other portions of the bills was not shown. The examination was adjourned until Jan. 3.

THE QUOTATIONS.

A Treasury Agent Testifies About These Mutilated Notes.

Alfred Lillianthall, who is charged with having false affidavits in regard to inflated Treasury notes forwarded by him to the United States Treasury Department at Washington for redemption, was brought up for examination before the United States Commissioner this morning.

Deputy Marshal John Thomas testified as to the arrest of Lillianthall on orders from Washington, and Alfred Relvay, chief of the Bedlam Department, was then sworn.

He said that the bills forwarded by the deponent were less than one-half of the original sum, and that the letter and affidavit accompanying them stated that the other portions of the bills had been paid by the signature of the attorney who signed the affidavit.

Upon searching the records it was found that one-half of each of these bills had been redeemed for their full face value about three years ago.

Mr. Lillianthall said that when one-half of a bill was presented it was redeemed for its full value, and when one-half less than one-half of the bill was presented it was redeemed for one-half of its face value.

Whether or not Lillianthall forwarded the other portions of the bills was not shown. The examination was adjourned until Jan. 3.

The wire reported that the subject had been revived by the justices. Certainly, we have received no orders to get uniforms, and nothing has been done in that direction.

They are to meet to-morrow for a uniform.

Alfred Lillianthall, who is charged with having false affidavits in regard to inflated Treasury notes forwarded by him to the United States Treasury Department at Washington for redemption, was brought up for examination before the United States Commissioner this morning.

Deputy Marshal John Thomas testified as to the arrest of Lillianthall on orders from Washington, and Alfred Relvay, chief of the Bedlam Department, was then sworn.

He said that the bills forwarded by the deponent were less than one-half of the original sum, and that the letter and affidavit accompanying them stated that the other portions of the bills had been paid by the signature of the attorney who signed the affidavit.

Upon searching the records it was found that one-half of each of these bills had been redeemed for their full face value about three years ago.

Mr. Lillianthall said that when one-half of a bill was presented it was redeemed for its full value, and when one-half less than one-half of the bill was presented it was redeemed for one-half of its face value.

Whether or not Lillianthall forwarded the other portions of the bills was not shown. The examination was adjourned until Jan. 3.

The wire reported that the subject had been revived by the justices. Certainly, we have received no orders to get uniforms, and nothing has been done in that direction.

They are to meet to-morrow for a uniform.

Alfred Lillianthall, who is charged with having false affidavits in regard to inflated Treasury notes forwarded by him to the United States Treasury Department at Washington for redemption, was brought up for examination before the United States Commissioner this morning.

Deputy Marshal John Thomas testified as to the arrest of Lillianthall on orders from Washington, and Alfred Relvay, chief of the Bedlam Department, was then sworn.

He said that the bills forwarded by the deponent were less than one-half of the original sum, and that the letter and affidavit accompanying them stated that the other portions of the bills had been paid by the signature of the attorney who signed the affidavit.

Upon searching the records it was found that one-half of each of these bills had been redeemed for their full face value about three years ago.

Mr. Lillianthall said that when one-half of a bill was presented it was redeemed for its full value, and when one-half less than one-half of the bill was presented it was redeemed for one-half of its face value.

Whether or not Lillianthall forwarded the other portions of the bills was not shown. The examination was adjourned until Jan. 3.

The wire reported that the subject had been revived by the justices. Certainly, we have received no orders to get uniforms, and nothing has been done in that direction.

They are to meet to-morrow for a uniform.

Alfred Lillianthall, who is charged with having false affidavits in regard to inflated Treasury notes forwarded by him to the United States Treasury Department at Washington for redemption, was brought up for examination before the United States Commissioner this morning.

Deputy Marshal John Thomas testified as to the arrest of Lillianthall on orders from Washington, and Alfred Relvay, chief of the Bedlam Department, was then sworn.

He said that the bills forwarded by the deponent were less than one-half of the original sum, and that the letter and affidavit accompanying them stated that the other portions of the bills had been paid by the signature of the attorney who signed the affidavit.

Upon searching the records it was found that one-half of each of these bills had been redeemed for their full face value about three years ago.

Mr. Lillianthall said that when one-half of a bill was presented it was redeemed for its full value, and when one-half less than one-half of the bill was presented it was redeemed for one-half of its face value.

Whether or not Lillianthall forwarded the other portions of the bills was not shown. The examination was adjourned until Jan. 3.

The wire reported that the subject had been revived by the justices. Certainly, we have received no orders to get uniforms, and nothing has been done in that direction.

They are to meet to-morrow for a uniform.

Alfred Lillianthall, who is charged with having false affidavits in regard to inflated Treasury notes forwarded by him to the United States Treasury Department at Washington for redemption, was brought up for examination before the United States Commissioner this morning.

Deputy Marshal John Thomas testified as to the arrest of Lillianthall on orders from Washington, and Alfred Relvay, chief of the Bedlam Department, was then sworn.

He said that the bills forwarded by the deponent were less than one-half of the original sum, and that the letter and affidavit accompanying them stated that the other portions of the bills had been paid by the signature of the attorney who signed the affidavit.